

January 21, 1851
Craft, William
Prescopy – Mitchell Library
Glasgow Female Anti-Slavery Society,
Sixth Annual Report, pp. 10-16
Glasgow, Scotland

Mr. William Craft next addressed the meeting—the Chairman having previously explained that the absence of Mrs. Craft was owing to severe indisposition. He reiterated the statements of Mr. Brown as to the services of Mr. Garrison to the Anti-Slavery cause, and the confidence entertained in him. He was the first white man that had shown him kindness in Boston. To his labours and efforts he ascribed much of the comfort and security which the negro population enjoyed there. His private opinions on other points he did not care for. This he knew, that he had never been false to the Anti-Slavery cause, but had persevered through obstacles that would have affrighted other men. At the commencement of his labour he had been mobbed, dragged about the streets by ropes, and even had a gallows erected opposite his own house, on which it was meant to have hung him. No coloured man, whose heart was right, could ever think of Mr. Garrison but with emotions of gratitude.

Mr. William Craft next addressed the meeting—the Chairman having previously explained that the absence of Mrs. Craft was owing to severe indisposition. He reiterated the statements of Mr. Brown as to the services of Mr. Garrison to the Anti-Slavery cause, and the confidence entertained in him. He was the first white man that had shown him kindness in Boston. To his labours and efforts he ascribed much of the comfort and security which the negro population enjoyed there. His private opinions on other points he did not care for. This he knew, that he had never been false to the Anti-Slavery cause, but had persevered through obstacles that would have affrighted other men. At the commencement of his labour he had been mobbed, dragged about the streets by ropes, and even had a gallows erected opposite his own house, on which it was meant to have hung him. No coloured man, whose heart was right, could ever think of Mr. Garrison but with emotions of gratitude.