

A Discourse by Dr. Pennington.

[On Monday evening last, according to announcement on Sabbath, a goodly number of the respectable colored citizens assembled in Zion Baptist Church, Rev. John T. Raymond, to hear a discourse by Rev. Dr. Pennington.]

The subject was one of marked interest and bound e[...] h[...] great ability, as the Doctor is ever wont to do, showing our relation and duty as an American people in general, and the colored people as a class in particular—to the government of the United States, and its relation and duty to us.

Nothing less than the Union entire with Emancipation, was the duty of the American Government, and anything short of that was defying the wrath of Heaven, and trampling under foot the eternal love of God, indelibly written upon the heart and conscience of every human being.

The Doctor concluded by exhorting the colored people to permit no misconceived idea to mislead them, but ever stand firm and loyal to the country, and although their loyalty was spurned, their aid coldly rejected, and the fiery ardor of their patriotism partially quenched by the cold waters of prejudice against them—yet he knew that the vital spark was still alive in the smouldering embers of adversity, which would yet be kindled into a flame, that would assist in warming into cheerfulness the sad hearthstones made vacant by the

A* Discourse by Dr. Pennington.

On Monday evening last, according to announcement on Sabbath, a goodly number of the respectable colored citizens assembled in Zion Baptist Church, Rev. John T. Raymond, to hear a discourse by Rev. Dr. Pennington.

The subject was one of marked interest and bound e h great ability, as the Doctor is ever wont to do, showing our relation and duty as an American people in general, and the colored people as a class in particular—to the government of the United States, and its relation and duty to us.

Nothing less than the Union entire with Emancipation, was the duty of the American Government, and anything short of that was defying the wrath of Heaven, and trampling under foot the eternal love of God, indelibly written upon the heart and conscience of every human being.

The Doctor concluded by exhorting the colored people to permit no misconceived idea to mislead them, but ever stand firm and loyal to the country, and although their loyalty was spurned, their aid coldly rejected, and the fiery ardor of their patriotism partially quenched by the cold waters of prejudice against them—yet he knew that the vital spark was still alive in the smouldering embers of adversity, which would yet be kindled into a flame, that would assist in warming into cheerfulness the sad hearthstones made vacant by the fall of their brave white brethren—who

have led the van in the strife of battle.

[It was announced that the doctor was
nearly ready and expected to sail for Europe
on Saturday the 5th current, and his friends
would meet him in a farewell assemblage at Shiloh Church, corner of Prince and Marion
Sts, on Thursday evening, the 3d.]

fall of their brave white brethren—who
have led the van in the strife of battle.

It was announced that the doctor was
nearly ready and expected to sail for Europe
on Saturday the 5th current, and his friends
would meet him in a farewell assemblage at Shiloh Church, corner of Prince and Marion
Sts, on Thursday evening, the 3d.