

Mr. Davis D. Turner was next introduced, who delivered the anniversary address. He spoke of the signs of the times, and looking back a few years saw the happy event that transpired in the European colonies, of slavery's extinction in the English and French possessions—those nations have “washed their hands clean of the slain of slavery.” “Great changes have taken place in America of late, and John Brown furnishes an example of this change. [tremendous applause.] Accounts reach us daily from the South teeming with accounts of outrages committed upon Northern white men, and because of Lincoln's election, South Carolina wants to secede.” This he regarded was the result of anti-slavery agitation. Referring to the apathy manifested by us he said: “Let us consider the signs of the times. Perhaps there never was a time when things were more favorable for us than now.” “The negro” he continued “is an important part in this nation, he is in Congress and in every national political party—a few months ago he split the Democratic party.” He closed with an appeal to the members, urging them to renewed action.

Mr. Davis D. Turner was next introduced, who delivered the anniversary address. He spoke of the signs of the times, and looking back a few years saw the happy event that transpired in the European colonies, of slavery's extinction in the English and French possessions—those nations have “washed their hands clean of the slain of slavery.” “Great changes have taken place in America of late, and John Brown furnishes an example of this change. [tremendous applause.] Accounts reach us daily from the South teeming with accounts of outrages committed upon Northern white men, and because of Lincoln's election, South Carolina wants to secede.” This he regarded as the result of anti-slavery agitation. Referring to the apathy manifested by us he said: “Let us consider the signs of the times. Perhaps there never was a time when things were more favorable for us than now.” “The negro” he continued “is an important part in this nation, he is in Congress and in every national political party—a few months ago he split the Democratic party.” He closed with an appeal to the members, urging them to renewed action.