

William W. Brown then came forward, and was greeted with hearty applause. He said, in substance, that he felt unprepared to properly express the emotions of his heart, in view of the honor extended him by this farewell. He did not regard himself as having merited the compliment by any labors of his, but he would accept it as their homage to the cause which he believed they all loved—the glorious cause of anti-slavery. He was proud that his name and the farewell were blended with the name and presentation to William Lloyd Garrison, a man who, for the past twenty years, had devoted his energies to the promulgation of that Heaven-approved principle—Eman- cipation, immediate and unconditional. Friends, we all are indebted to the anti-slavery cause; but I can testify to the intensity of that feeling known only to the American slave; and when I contrast my position this evening with what it was a few years ago, when by the Constitution and laws of the United States I was a chattel personal, my heart is filled with unutter- able joy. All that I am now, or expect to be in this world, I owe to the anti-slavery cause. Glorious in- deed as is the country which gave me birth, and re- nowned as is her name; admired as she has become for extending the hand of welcome to the oppressed of other lands, yet for me there is no liberty or repub- licanism on American soil. I go to the land of monar- chical England, where, the moment my foot presses the sod, I can raise my free hands, with none to mo- lest or make me afraid.

My friends, I go as a humble delegate to the great Peace Convention in Paris, and while there, can repose in safety under the banner of Lib- erty, Equality, and Fraternity. The proposed conven-

William W. Brown then came forward, and was greeted with hearty applause. He said, in substance, that he felt unprepared to properly express the emo- tions of his heart, in view of the honor extended him by this farewell. He did not regard himself as hav- ing merited the compliment by any labors of his, but he would accept it as their homage to the cause which he believed they all loved—the glorious cause of anti-slavery. He was proud that his name and the farewell were blended with the name and presentation to William Lloyd Garrison, a man who, for the past twenty years, had devoted his energies to the pro- mulgation of that Heaven-approved principle—Eman- cipation, immediate and unconditional. Friends, we all are indebted to the anti-slavery cause; but I can testify to the intensity of that feeling known only to the American slave; and when I contrast my position this evening with what it was a few years ago, when by the Constitution and laws of the United States I was a chattel personal, my heart is filled with unutter- able joy. All that I am now, or expect to be in this world, I owe to the anti-slavery cause. Glorious in- deed as is the country which gave me birth, and re- nowned as is her name; admired as she has become for extending the hand of welcome to the oppressed of other lands, yet for me there is no liberty or repub- licanism on American soil. I go to the land of monar- chical England, where, the moment my foot presses the sod, I can raise my free hands, with none to mo- lest or make me afraid.

My friends, I go as a humble delegate to the great Peace Convention in Paris, and while there, can repose in safety under the banner, of Lib- erty, Equality, and Fraternity. The proposed convention will doubtless hasten on the anti-slavery movement, for the two reforms blend harmoniously in promoting 'peace on earth and good will to men.'

July 27, 1849
Brown, William Wells
Liberator

I shall labor on the other side of the Atlantic for the prosperity of our cause, and though I part tonight from the association of dear friends and fellow-laborers, the recollection of this hour will, I trust, nerve me to continued duty. I thank you for the honor and confidence reposed in me by your kind expression this evening. God bless you!

tion will doubtless hasten on the anti-slavery movement, for the two reforms blend harmoniously in promoting 'peace on earth and good will to men.'

I shall labor on the other side of the Atlantic for the prosperity of our cause, and though I part tonight from the association of dear friends and fellow-laborers, the recollection of this hour will, I trust, nerve me to continued duty. I thank you for the honor and confidence reposed in me by your kind expression this evening. God bless you!