

The prayers of Mr. Lincoln have been referred to repeatedly. I judge a man not so much by his praying as by what he does after he prays. I believe that no where in the world is there so much praying as in the South, nor so much deviltry.

I was born a slave. And I lived one until after Gen. Butler went to New Orleans. Then I thought the time had come for me to be free, and I began to pray, and also to act. And I made my escape.

In the South, all the slaveholders hated Abraham Lincoln, and cursed and abused him. That made us think Mr. Lincoln was on our side, and I shall now take a bright view of his character.

The Anti-Slavery work is not yet done. When the black man is forced into the army with inferior pay, and the refusal of the rights of a citizen, it is plain that the work necessary for that people is not yet finished.

Some of the speakers here have painted Mr. Lincoln in very black colors. I shall now notice some of the good things he has done. It has been said that more fugitives have been returned to slavery under Mr. Lincoln than under any other President. But it is fair to observe also that more slaves have been emancipated under him than under any other President.

The difficult time for this country will be when the rebels have been whipped, and the work of reconstruction begins. Then we must take care that slavery is buried so deep as not to rise again even in the morning of the resurrection.

The prayers of Mr. Lincoln have been referred to repeatedly. I judge a man not so much by his praying as by what he does after he prays. I believe that no where in the world is there so much praying as in the South, nor so much deviltry.

I was born a slave. And I lived one until after Gen. Butler went to New Orleans. Then I thought the time had come for me to be free, and I began to pray, and also to act. And I made my escape.

In the South, all the slaveholders hated Abraham Lincoln, and cursed and abused him. That made us think Mr. Lincoln was on our side, and I shall now take a bright view of his character.

The Anti-Slavery work is not yet done. When the black man is forced into the army with inferior pay, and the refusal of the rights of a citizen, it is plain that the work necessary for that people is not yet finished.

Some of the speakers here have painted Mr. Lincoln in very black colors. I shall now notice some of the good things he has done. It has been said that more fugitives have been returned to slavery under Mr. Lincoln than under any other President. But it is fair to observe also that more slaves have been emancipated under him than under any other President.

The difficult time for this country will be when the rebels have been whipped, and the work of reconstruction begins. Then we must take care that slavery is buried so deep as not to rise again even in the morning of the resurrection.