

On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings of last week, Prof. Robert Campbell, gave two illustrated lectures on Central Africa, at the Masonic Hall, Sout[h] 11th street below Pine. The lectures were illustrated by maps, and specimens of the manufactures and produce of the country. Mr. Campbell appeared in the native African costume. On Tuesday evening, the attendance was quiet small, but on Wednesday evening, there was rather a better attendance. There are many persons here who have never read Mr. Campbell's pamphlet, nor his book, nor heard him lecture upon the subject of his travels, who would no doubt be interested in a lecture of the kind, but for some reason or reasons they did not avail themselves of the opportunity. Some persons think that to attend a lecture on emigration, is equivalent to speaking in its favor; this, however, I cannot endorse, for every one should be willing to learn as much as possible concerning any country, Africa and Hayti not excepted. This is simply Mr. Campbell's design in giving the lectures. I never heard him use a single argument to convince any one of the necessity of emigrating anywhere[.] I have no doubt that the times had much to do with the slim attendance at the lectures; that the question of emigration had nothing whatever to do with it.

On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings of last week, Prof. Robert Campbell, gave two illustrated lectures on Central Africa, at the Masonic Hall, Sout 11th street below Pine. The lectures were illustrated by maps, and specimens of the manufactures and produce of the country. Mr. Campbell appeared in the native African costume. On Tuesday evening, the attendance was quite small, but on Wednesday evening, there was rather a better attendance. There are many persons here who have never read Mr. Campbell's pamphlet, nor his book, nor heard him lecture upon the subject of his travels, who would no doubt be interested in a lecture of the kind, but for some reason or reasons they did not avail themselves of the opportunity. Some persons think that to attend a lecture on emigration, is equivalent to speaking in its favor; this, however, I cannot endorse, for every one should be willing to learn as much as possible concerning any country, Africa and Hayti not excepted. This is simply Mr. Campbell's design in giving the lectures. I never heard him use a single argument to convince any one of the necessity of emigrating anywhere. I have no doubt that the times had much to do with the slim attendance at the lectures; that the question of emigration had nothing whatever to do with it.