

The Rev. Dr. PENNINGTON, also a fugitive slave, referred to the slave-chase at Washington, narrated in another column, and said, that if such scenes occurred even on the soil of slavery, what might be expected in the Free States under the new bill? It was a bill which, he deliberately declared, could not be enforced. The law would prove a nullity. Dr. Pennington exhorted the meeting to purchase, wherever they had the choice, free in preference to slave-labour produce. He rejoiced to know that such a feeling was spreading in Great Britain, and that in Lancashire the manufacturers were anxiously looking to new fields for the supply of cotton.

The Rev. Dr. PENNINGTON, also a fugitive slave, referred to the slave-chase at Washington, narrated in another column, and said, that if such scenes occurred even on the soil of slavery, what might be expected in the Free States under the new bill? It was a bill which, he deliberately declared, could not be enforced. The law would prove a nullity. Dr. Pennington exhorted the meeting to purchase, wherever they had the choice, free in preference to slave-labour produce. He rejoiced to know that such a feeling was spreading in Great Britain, and that in Lancashire the manufacturers were anxiously looking to new fields for the supply of cotton.