

The Chair then introduced Mr. Jenkins to the audience; who arose and entertained us with many interesting remarks of the rise and progress of the Palladium of Liberty, which was satisfactory indeed. He then changed his subject to an exposition of the Constitution and Statute laws of Ohio, from 1802, down to the present Legislature; and of the different bearings of those oppressive enactments against us as colored citizens, removing from us our elective power, making no arrangements for the education of our children, denying us the proper source of justice in Courts, and collecting a tax off of us without giving us the benefit as other citizens. The above, with many other interesting remarks were dwelt upon by the speaking. But not with chagrin and fanaticism; but with calmness. The subject was well considered accompanied with facts.

After the Speaker had ended his address, an invitation was given for subscribers to the Palladium of Liberty, which in a few moments the Secretary was enabled to announce to the audience 35, who had subscribed.

Mr. Jenkins, arose and returned thanks to the audience for their attention and patronage.

The Chair then introduced Mr. Jenkins to the audience; who arose and entertained us with many interesting remarks of the rise and progress of the Palladium of Liberty, which was satisfactory indeed. He then changed his subject to an exposition of the Constitution and Statute laws of Ohio, from 1802, down to the present Legislature; and of the different bearings of those oppressive enactments against us as colored citizens, removing from us our elective power, making no arrangements for the education of our children, denying us the proper source of justice in Courts, and collecting a tax off of us without giving us the benefit as other citizens. The above, with many other interesting remarks were dwelt upon by the speaker. But not with chagrin and fanaticism; but with calmness. The subject was well considered accompanied with facts.

After the Speaker had ended his address, an invitation was given for subscribers to the Palladium of Liberty, which in a few moments the Secretary was enabled to announce to the audience 35, who had subscribed.

Mr. Jenkins, arose and returned thanks to the audience for their attention and patronage.