

LECTURE ON TOTAL ABSTINENCE.—On the evening of Friday, 11th inst., Miss Remond delivered a lecture on total abstinence from intoxicating drinks, in the Theatre, within which was well filled on the occasion— The Rev. Mr. [Guold], president of the Total Abstinence Society, in the Chair. The lecturer urged the advantages of total abstinence on her audience on the grounds of safety to themselves and example to others. She at considerable length urged the importance of female efforts to promote the causes of abstinence, and showed the great influence which females might exert in the training of the rising generation in habits of total abstinence. She adverted to the Maine Law and the mode in which it was evaded in America; but, while approving of the principle, she believed that intemperance would never be extinguished except by the inculcation of moral and religious principles.

LECTURE ON TOTAL ABSTINENCE.— On the evening of Friday, 11th inst., Miss Remond delivered a lecture on total abstinence from intoxicating drinks, in the Theatre, which was well filled on the occasion—The Rev. Mr. Guold, president of the Total Abstinence Society, in the chair. The lecturer urged the advantages of total abstinence on her audience on the grounds of safety to themselves and example to others. She at considerable length urged the importance of female efforts to promote the causes of abstinence, and showed the great influence which females might exert in the training of the rising generation in habits of total abstinence. She adverted to the Maine Law and the mode in which it was evaded in America; but, while approving of the principle, she believed that intemperance would never be extinguished except by the inculcation of moral and religious principles. Dr McCulloch, in moving a vote of thanks to the lecturer, made a few remarks on the physical aspects of the question, maintaining that the cases were extremely rare in which alcoholic liquors were beneficial as medicine. The Chairman closed with a few observations on the cost of intemperance to the community in the increase of pauperism and crime which it produced.