

T. H. C. Hinton (colored) was called on to speak. This is a great day in which we live. The occasion requires plain talk. The pall of death, and worse than death, hanging over us, will be removed, and we will come out in full manhood. We are a part of this government, and let us do our part in its struggle. He was willing to say he would go too. (Applause.) Let us show our appreciation of the labors of our friends in our behalf. We will stand by the President. ("Good.") While, on the one hand, a people stand ready to oppress us, on the other hand are our friends to hold us up. Then let us shoulder the musket, and do our duty. This duty is as binding as the law of God. These men who are to lead us are the right men in the right place. We know them, and can safely trust them to lead us. There is no other way for our full deliverance but through the bloody sword and the leaden ball. (Applause.) Arise, and proclaim with one grade voice, "Liberty or death!" (Great applause.)

T. H. C. Hinton (colored) was called on to speak. This is a great day in which we live. The occasion requires plain talk. The pall of death, and worse than death, hanging over us, will be removed, and we will come out in full manhood. We are a part of this government, and let us do our part in its struggle. He was willing to say he would go too. (Applause.) Let us show our appreciation of the labors of our friends in our behalf. We will stand by the President. ("Good.") While, on the one hand, a people stand ready to oppress us, on the other hand are our friends to hold us up. Then let us shoulder the musket, and do our duty. This duty is as binding as the law of God. These men who are to lead us are the right men in the right place. We know them, and can safely trust them to lead us. There is no other way for our full deliverance but through the bloody sword and the leaden ball. (Applause.) Arise, and proclaim with one grand voice, "Liberty or death!" (Great applause.)