

On Tuesday evening, a lecture was delivered in the Commercial Buildings, Spring-street, by Miss Remond, (a lady of colour), when there was an overflowing audience, hundreds of persons seeking in vain to gain admission. The pleasure was so great that several persons had to be taken out of the room in a fainting condition. The Rev. F. Howorth occupied the chair. Miss Remond in a very eloquent style of address delivered a most impressive lecture, depicting the horrors of slavery in a most touching manner. In the course of her address she passed a high encomium on Miss Florence Nightingale, who, during the Crimean campaign was known to walk in the corridors twelve miles per day in attending to the wounded soldiers. She had been known on one occasion to spend seven hours in extracting shot from a soldier's wounds, and the result was, the man's life was spared. Her delicate fingers were better adapted to the duty than those of the surgeon. Miss Remond also passed a high compliment on the character of Miss Mary Carpenter, sister to the Rev. Philip Carpenter, formerly minister at the Unitarian Chapel, Strand. She noticed the efforts of Miss Carpenter in endeavouring to reform juvenile criminals, and asserted that it was a rule of almost universal application that those who are the earnest friends of the slave are those who are most assiduous and persevering in efforts for good in every possible way. The lecture was listened to with the most marked attention; and we have no doubt that should Miss Remond again visit Bury there would be a larger number of persons wishful to hear her than there were on Tuesday night last. On the conclusion of

On Tuesday evening, a lecture was delivered in the Commercial Buildings, Spring-street, by Miss Remond, (a lady of colour), when there was an overflowing audience, hundreds of persons seeking in vain to gain admission. The pressure was so great that several persons had to be taken out of the room in a fainting condition. The Rev. F. Howorth occupied the chair. Miss Remond in a very eloquent style of address delivered a most impressive lecture, depicting the horrors of slavery in a most touching manner. In the course of her address she passed a high encomium on Miss Florence Nightingale, who, during the Crimean campaign was known to walk in the corridors twelve miles per day in attending to the wounded soldiers. She had been known on one occasion to spend seven hours in extracting shot from a soldier's wounds, and the result was, the man's life was spared. Her delicate fingers were better adapted to the duty than those of the surgeon. Miss Remond also passed a high compliment on the character of Miss Mary Carpenter, sister to the Rev. Philip Carpenter, formerly minister at the Unitarian Chapel, Strand. She noticed the efforts of Miss Carpenter in endeavouring to reform juvenile criminals, and asserted that it was a rule of almost universal application that those who are the earnest friends of the slave are those who are most assiduous and persevering in efforts for good in every possible way. The lecture was listened to with the most marked attention; and we have no doubt that should Miss Remond again visit Bury there would be a larger number of persons wishful to hear her than there were on Tuesday night last. On the conclusion of

November 1, 1859
Remond, [Sarah Parker]
Anti-Slavery Advocate

the lecture a vote of thanks to the lecturer was proposed by the Rev. W. Roseman, seconded by the Rev. Mr. Peet, and carried unanimously.

the lecture a vote of thanks to the lecturer was proposed by the Rev. W. Roseman, seconded by the Rev. Mr. Peet, and carried unanimously.