

[On Thursday evening the Banneker Institute, celebrated the 128th anniversary of the birth day of Benjamin Banneker, and the seventh anniversary of the Banneker Institute, at eh Masonic Hall in South 11th street below Pine. The exercises consisted of music and literature.] The President, Mr. John W. Simpson, delivered the opening address, in which he alluded to our condition in this country, mentioned the means by which we may rise, spoke of Banneker as a shining light, and discoursed quite elegantly upon our general affairs, mentioned some of the disabilities under which we are made to labor as disseminators of literature, directing special attention to the fact that some of our churches refuse to read notices of literary demonstrations. This he deprecated in very strong terms. He was very happy in this style; was rather protracted than brief, and exhibited an earnestness of manner which bespoke sincerity.

On Thursday evening the Banneker Institute, celebrated the 128th anniversary of the birth day of Benjamin Banneker, and the seventh anniversary of the Banneker Institute, at the Masonic Hall in South 11th street below Pine. The exercises consisted of music and literature. The President, Mr. John W. Simpson, delivered the opening address, in which he alluded to our condition in this country, mentioned the means by which we may rise, spoke of Banneker as a shining light, and discoursed quite elegantly upon our general affairs, mentioned some of the disabilities under which we are made to labor as disseminators of literature, directing special attention to the fact that some of our churches refuse to read notices of literary demonstrations. This he deprecated in very strong terms. He was very happy in his style; was rather protracted than brief, and exhibited an earnestness of manner which bespoke sincerity.