

As was announced in our latest issue, Mr. W. H. Day, the well-known lecturer upon Liberty, entertained the people of this place, at the Town Hall on Wednesday evening.— The audience was composed of some of the first inhabitants of the place, but although respectable in character, the number was much smaller than we had hoped for. But we only repeat the sentiment of all without an exception, when we say that all were gratified—more than gratified.

Mr. Day's subject—The prospect of Liberty to the Bondman—was no hum-drum talk about the Slave but a logical, historical, and we may add, beautifully rhetorical delineation of the bondman's position in the neighboring Republic, and the prospect for his liberty. Mr. Day was continually applauded, and at the close in connection with a vote of thanks to the speaker by acclamation, moved by Mr. J. W. Rose and supported by Rev. William King of [Paxton], Mr. Day was requested to repeat his address on Wednesday eve'g, September first, just two weeks hence[.] Prominent persons present came forward and volunteered to assist as far as they were able, in securing a house in numbers worthy of the man, the lecture and the cause.

As was announced in our latest issue, Mr. W. H. Day, the well-known lecturer upon Liberty, entertained the people of this place, at the Town Hall, on Wednesday evening.— The audience was composed of some of the first inhabitants of the place, but although respectable in character, the number was much smaller than we had hoped for. But we only repeat the sentiment of all without an exception, when we say that all were gratified—more than gratified.

Mr. Day's subject—The prospect of Liberty to the Bondman—was no hum-drum talk about the Slave, but a logical, historical, and we may add, beautifully rhetorical delineation of the bondman's position in the neighboring Republic, and the prospect for his liberty. Mr. Day was continually applauded, and at the close in connection with a vote of thanks to the speaker by acclamation, moved by Mr. J. W. Rose and supported by Rev. William King of Paxton, Mr. Day was requested to repeat his address on Wednesday eve'g, September first, just two weeks hence. Prominent persons present came forward and volunteered to assist as far as they were able, in securing a house in numbers worthy of the man, the lecture and the cause.