

Rev. Mr. Winkfield (colored) was introduced. He was happy to feel that the time had arrived when they could enter on his work. He could not withhold his hearty support to the enterprise. We have to noble leaders, (turning to Messrs. Turner and Raymond,) who have stood up for us, who have labored and felt for us, and who can appreciate our difficulties. No better men could be got. Many men desire to lead our people in battle, and it might be our lot to fall into the hands of others who do not know us so well. These are the men of our choice. We can safely rally under them. I am willing to give my life to my country, now that liberty and justice are with her. Life is sweet, but country is better. My home is secure in heaven, and I shall go, trusting to God; and if I fall, I shall fall doing my duty. Our people are free, and let us go and defend them. We now have an opportunity to be men. Shall we longer endure the scorn of that race which has oppressed us? (Great enthusiasm and cries of "No! No!") May the time speedily come when we shall see that flag, under which we have been oppressed, but which is now truly the emblem of freedom, float in triumph over the entire continent! (Applause.) It is now my flag, and I will die for it. (Loud applause.)

Rev. Mr. Winkfield (colored) was introduced. He was happy to feel that the time had arrived when they could enter on this work. He could not withhold his hearty support to the enterprise. We have two noble leaders, (turning to Messrs. Turner and Raymond,) who have stood up for us, who have labored and felt for us, and who can appreciate our difficulties. No better men could be got. Many men desire to lead our people in battle, and it might be our lot to fall into the hands of others who do not know us so well. These are the men of our choice. We can safely rally under them. I am willing to give my life to my country, now that liberty and justice are with her. Life is sweet, but country is better. My home is secure in heaven, and I shall go, trusting to God; and if I fall, I shall fall doing my duty. Our people are free, and let us go and defend them. We now have an opportunity to be men. Shall we longer endure the scorn of that race which has oppressed us? (Great enthusiasm and cries of "No! No!") May the time speedily come when we shall see that flag, under which we have been oppressed, but which is now truly the emblem of freedom, float in triumph over the entire continent! (Applause.) It is now my flag, and I will die for it. (Loud applause.)